

Minority-Majority Relations – Bridging gaps in perception and media discourses

Abstract

The research project titled “Minority Majority Relations: Bridging the Gap in Perceptions”, is part of a self directed publication that examines the underlying processes that are part of minority – majority relations with a focus on the experiences of Diaspora groups on pressing social and political issues in Canada that have gripped them in the modern world. The project will provide a rare glimpse into some of the issues faced by Diaspora groups in general and more specifically the Sikh Diaspora in Canada. The book also aims to interrogate and deconstruct a common sense understanding of specific issues affecting Diaspora groups and to bridge gaps in perceptions through a critical examination of media discourses, dominant narratives and representations of minority groups in Canada and impacts on identity.
