Course Description, Prerequisites, Corequisites:

This course broadens students' understanding of the fundamentals of relief printmaking. Students will develop and translate their ideas through the creation of linocut, collograph and experimental relief prints, and become more confident in their ability to produce small editions. Incorporating presentations on the history of relief printmaking and contemporary applications and examples, the primary focus of the course is the hands-on exploration of these various techniques.

Prerequisite(s): Minimum "C-" grade in all of the following: FINA 1120, 1171 and either FINA 1161 or 1220.

Corequisites: n/a

Registration restricted to students admitted to the Fine Arts program

Learning Outcomes:

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

- create original relief prints using a variety of traditional methods and equipment
- apply the elements and principles of 2D design as they relate to printmaking image development
- use appropriate printmaking terminology to discuss and critique both their own work and the work of others
- adapt their creative concepts to incorporate the inherent characteristics of each distinct print matrix
- work independently in the studio
- practice safe and responsible printmaking studio etiquette
- use basic relief/collographic principles and techniques to create printed imagery
- recognize and analyze the technical and aesthetic aspects of relief/collographic prints
- discuss their relief/collographic work within a historical and traditional context and describe how it relates to their own practice
- use colour appropriate to their artistic concerns
- accept and apply critical analysis
