Topics Covered:

[Topics covered may vary by instructor. An example of topics covered might be:]

War and Society examines war and historical change from ancient to modern times. We will assess collective identities, state formation, and economic systems in shaping war-making capabilities of nations, empires and sub-state actors. We will also examine the relationship between war, social change and culture. Distinctions and discussions will occur on the concepts of limited war and total war, "conventional" and "irregular" warfare, along with issues of the morality of war, and its function. By the end of this course you should have a solid sense of the evolution of warfare and most importantly its role as an instrument of change in transforming societies while also itself being transformed by society at large.
